Woman at top in IHIE

23 June 2006

Susan Broadaway today became the first woman President of one of the leading highway engineering institutions - the Institute of Highway Incorporated Engineers (IHIE).

Susan, Section Manager for Traffic and Transportation with Denbighshire County Council, said "I am proud to be driving forward highways and transportation engineering to address occupational segregation and, career balance and, not only showing young women what fulfilling careers beckon them, but also to engage more with our fellow professionals in assisting with the skills shortage".

Susan has been with Denbighshire for ten years following thirteen years at Clwyd. She gained her professional qualification as an Incorporated Engineer and Fellow of IHIE in 1992 and is a past chairman of the IHT North Wales Branch, Denbighshire's Director of Environment, Iwan Prys-Jones, and Head of Transport & Infrastructure, David Farquhar, greeted Susan's election with enthusiasm " We wish Susan well and give her our full support during her Presidency".
